Balls lose pressure since they are first taken out of their original container, just by being exposed to atmospheric pressure.

This pressure loss is acuter upon impact with the racket or ground, making them lose up to 25% of their original pressure in just the first match.

They soon ceased to meet Federation Standard bounce, which means:

- Insufficient and irregular bounce, making the game slower and uneasy.
- Lower quality classes.
- Limited set of workable exercises (power shots, for instance).
- Less enjoyable classes
- Increase in the chances of student (and teacher) injury

Whitin an hour class, each ball is played with some 4 to 5 times. That sets the weariness equivalent of one match in around a week of classes.

Replacing balls one a month means disposing of them when they have only been used for a small fraction of their lifetime.

Sports clubs typically spend around 1.300 euros per ball trolley every year, disposing of balls that are barely new every time. Moreover, those balls have been bouncing insufficiently most of that time.

For example, a club featuring 4 ball trolleys wastes an outrageous 5.200 € in discarded balls every year, unnecessarily.
